Dee, Sandra(1942–2005) (Alexandra Zuck)
Petite American leading lady, former model, who was best known for her title role as Gidget, a Californian teenager who frolicked innocently with boys on beaches; its success led to a several sequels and a TV series, though those starred different actresses. Born in Bayonne, New Jersey, she began in TV commercials. She followed after Debbie Reynolds as Tammy, another tomboyish role, in three movies, found it difficult to escape her typecasting as a teenager and, after Universal Studios dropped her in the late 60s, was reduced to appearing in low budget movies or in small roles in TV dramas. She revealed in the 90s that she had been sexually abused as a child by her stepfather and pushed into acting by her mother. She turned to pills and drink and, in the 80s, said that she had drunk more than a quart of scotch a day. Married (1960-67) singer Bobby Darin, with whom she starred in three films. She was played by Kate Bosworth in the Bobby Darin biopic Beyond the Sea in 2004.

Deed, André(1884–1938) (Andre Chapuis)
French actor and director who was probably cinema's first comedian. A music-hall acrobat and singer, he entered films in 1905, when he was discovered by Charles Pathé, to become one of the screen's first stars, though hardly any of his films survive. He was known by different names in different countries: Boireau in France, Foolshead in Britain, Cretinetti in Italy, and Toribio in Spain. His popularity ending with the coming of sound, he became night-watchman at the Pathé studios and died forgotten.

Del Giudice, Filippo (1892–1961)
Exuberant Italian producer who settled in England and helped create some of the best British films of the 40s, persuading Noël Coward to write and star in In Which We Serve and Laurence Olivier to make Henry V (Olivier handed over the special Oscar he won for the film to Del Giudice in gratitude). Born in Trani, he became a lawyer, leaving Italy in the early 30s because of financial difficulties. In London, he first taught English to Italian waiters before finding financial backing to found Two Cities Films in 1937. After he lost control of the company to the Rank Organization in the mid-40s, when Henry V went over budget, he retired to a monastery and then founded Pilgrim Films, planning a series of religious epics. Later plans foundered for lack of finance, and he returned to Italy to die.

Dickens, Charles (1812–1870)

Prolific British novelist whose gusto in characterization and plot-weaving made his books ideal cinema material until the last decade when producers seem to have thought them old-fashioned. Most filmed has perhaps been A Christmas Carol, usually personified as Scrooge; but Oliver Twist runs it a close second. There had been several early silent versions of David Copperfield before Cukor's splendid 1934 version, and The Old Curiosity Shop was popular as the basis of one-reelers before the talkie versions with Hay Petrie (1935) and Anthony Newley (1975). A Tale of Two Cities had been a popular stage play under the title The Only Way; after many early versions it was directed as a spectacular by Frank Lloyd in 1917, with William Farnum; as a British silent in 1926, with Martin Harvey; as a vehicle for Ronald Colman in 1935; and in a rather uninspired British version of 1958 starring Dirk Bogarde. A 1969 all-star version of David Copperfield was primarily intended for American TV.

Other Dickens novels less frequently filmed include The Mystery of Edwin Drood, once as an early British silent, again in Hollywood in 1935, with Claude Rains as John Jasper, and again in Britain in 1993 with Robert Powell; Great Expectations, which had two silent versions, a rather dull Hollywood remake of 1934 and the magnificent David Lean version of 1946; Dombey and Son, under the title Rich Man's Folly, starring George Bancroft in 1931; Nicholas Nickleby, the only picturization of which was the patchy Ealing version of 1947, though the Royal Shakespeare Company's epic stage production has been released on video; and The Pickwick Papers, seen in various potted versions in silent days and in Noel Langley's superficial version of 1952.

Dickens' novels which were filmed in the silent period but not since sound include The Cricket on the Hearth, Martin Chuzzlewit, Our Mutual Friend and Barnaby Rudge. Little Dorrit was made in Germany in 1933 with Anny Ondra, and in 1987 by the Richard Brabourne group at a 6-hour length with a cast headed by Alec Guinness.

✪ For enjoying being a legend. Destry Rides Again.

❝ If she had nothing but her voice, she could break your heart with it. But she also has that beautiful body and the timeless loveliness of her face. – Ernest Hemingway

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale her infinite sameness – David Shipman

I have a child and I have made a few people happy. That is all. – M.D.

The relationship between the make-up man and the film actor is that of accomplices in crime – M.D.

There is a lack of dignity to film stardom. – M.D.

She has sex but no positive gender. Her masculinity appeals to women and her sexuality to men. – Ken Tynan

You lit Dietrich with one very high key light, far away and very little or no fill light, which was what gave that fantastic modeling to her cheekbones and eye sockets. – Charles Lang

The legs aren't so beautiful, I just know what to do with them. – M.D.

I never ever took my career seriously. – M.D.

I was an actress. I made my films. Finish. – M.D.

You should be afraid of life, yes, but not of death. Then you know nothing more. It's all over. – M.D.

It took more than one man to change my name to Shanghai Lily. – M.D. in Shanghai Express

See what the boys in the back room will have
And tell them I'm having the same.
See what the boys in the back room will have
And give me the poison they name.
And if I die, don't bring a preacher
To witness all my follies and my shame;
Just see what the boys in the back room will have
And tell them I sighed –
And tell them I cried –
And tell them I died of the same! – M.D. in Destry Rides Again

The Dionne Quins

Born in 1934, were Cecile, Annette, Emilie (d. 1954), Marie (d. 1970), and Yvonne. Born in North Bay, Ontario, they became a tourist attraction, being first exhibited by their father, and then by the government of Ontario, which built for them Quintland, which at its height was visited by 6,000 people a day. Their parents regained custody of them in 1943, as their popularity waned. They appeared in three films: The Country Doctor 36, a fictionalization of their birth; Reunion 36; Five of a Kind 38.

Disney, Walt(1901–1966)

American animator and executive whose name is a household word all over the world. Formerly a commercial artist, he produced his first Mickey Mouse cartoon in 1928, using his own voice; also Silly Symphonies, one of which (Flowers and Trees 33) was the first film in full Technicolor. Donald Duck first appeared in 1936. First full-length cartoon: Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs 37, followed by Pinocchio 39, Fantasia 40, Dumbo 41, Bambi 42, The Three Caballeros (combining cartoon and live action) 44, Cinderella 50, Alice in Wonderland 51, Peter Pan 53, Lady and the Tramp 56, The Sleeping Beauty 59, One Hundred and One Dalmatians 61, The Sword in the Stone 63, Winnie the Pooh and the Honey Tree 66, The Jungle Book 67, The Aristocats 70, Robin Hood 73, The Rescuers 77, The Black Cauldron 85, The Great Mouse Detective 86, Little Mermaid 89, The Rescuers Down Under 90, Beauty and the Beast (AAN) 91, Aladdin 92, The Lion King 94, Pocahontas 95. First live-action feature Treasure Island 50, followed by a plentiful supply including westerns (Westward Ho the Wagons, The Nine Lives of Elfego Baca), adventure classics (Kidnapped, Dr Syn), animal yarns (Greyfriars Bobby, Old Yeller, The Incredible Journey), cosy fantasies with music (In Search of the Castaways, Mary Poppins), trick comedies (The Absent-Minded Professor, Son of Flubber) and plain old-fashioned family fun (Bon Voyage, The Ugly Dachshund). The patchiness of these films has meant that although the Disney label is still a sure sign of suitability for children, it no longer necessarily indicates quality of any other kind. In 1948 began the irresistible series of 'True-Life Adventures' (cleverly jazzed-up animal documentaries containing much rare footage) and in 1953 came the first feature of this kind, The Living Desert; the series has unfortunately died out. In 1994, The Lion King became the company's top-grossing animated film, and one of the all-time top ten box-office successes in America, taking more than $220m at the box-office. Disney's other recent animated films have also been successes, with Aladdin grossing $217.4m and Beauty and the Beast $145.8m, although Disney's first, Snow White and the Seven Dwarfs, remains among its top hits, having taken $175.3m over the years. In August 1995, Disney paid $19 billion to take over Capital Cities/ABC, companies with interests in broadcasting, satellite and cable TV, including the ABC television network.

Disney's long list of Academy Awards are all for shorts, apart from 'special awards' for Snow White, Fantasia, The Living Desert and The Vanishing Prairie. They include a special award for creating Mickey Mouse 32. Three Little Pigs 33. The Tortoise and the Hare 34. Three Orphan Kittens 35. The Old Mill 37. Ferdinand the Bull 38. The Ugly Duckling 39. Lend a Paw 41. Der Fuhrer's Face 42. Seal Island 48. Beaver Valley 50. Nature's Half Acre 51. Water Birds 52. Toot Whistle Plunk and Boom 53. Bear Country 53. The Alaskan Eskimo 53. Men against the Arctic 55. The Wetback Hound 57. White Wilderness 58. Ama Girls 58. The Horse with the Flying Tail 60. Winnie the Pooh and the Blustery Day 68, etc.

Biography: Walt Disney, was published in 1958 by his daughter Diane, and in 1968 came Richard Schickel's iconoclastic The Disney Version, with Marc Elliot's even more iconoclastic Walt Disney: Hollywood's Dark Prince being published in 1993. A massive informational tome is Christopher Finch's The Art of Walt Disney 73. Further information was contained in 1973 in Disney Animation: The Illusion of Life, by Frank Thomas and Ollie Johnston. In 1998, thriller writer Carl Hiassen wrote a biting polemic, attacking Walt Disney's worldview, as enshrined in Disneyland, in Team Rodent: How Disney Devours the World.

◎ For creating a whole new world of magic as a corrective to the real one. Pinocchio.

❝ I love Mickey Mouse more than any woman I've ever known. – W.D.

Douglas, Michael (1944–)

American leading actor and producer, the son of Kirk Douglas. Born in New Brunswick, New Jersey, he studied at the University of California and began by working as an assistant director on some of his father's films in the 60s. He first came to notice as Steve Keller in the TV series The Streets of San Francisco, and then produced One Flew over the Cuckoo's Nest, a project his father had once planned to star in. Since then, his roles have successfully ranged from the romantic to the ruthless, and he has revealed a great ability to choose parts that plug into contemporary concerns. His success has not been without some personal difficulties: in 1990 he attended a clinic for alcohol and substance abuse. Married his second wife, actress Catherine Zeta-Jones, in 2000.

Du Barry, Madame (1741–1793)
The French courtesan and mistress of Louis XV whose life was ended on the guillotine was a favourite role for many actresses, though Lubitsch's 1919 German film starring Pola Negri is probably still the best. Other actress who have played the role include Mrs Leslie Carter in Du Barry 15; Theda Bara in Du Barry 17; Norma Talmadge in Du Barry, Woman of Passion 30; Dolores del Rio in Madame Du Barry 34; Lucille Ball in Du Barry Was a Lady 43; and Martine Carol in Mistress Du Barry 54.

Du Maurier, Daphne (1907–1989)
Best-selling English novelist, the daughter of Sir Gerald Du Maurier. Born in London, she was a published author from her early twenties. Married athlete and army officer Frederick 'Boy' Browning, who was knighted in 1946; she also had an earlier affair with director Carol Reed and a later passion for Gertrude Lawrence. She was unhappy with most of the movie adaptations of her novels, apart from Rebecca and Don't Look Now, particularly disliking the films of Jamaica Inn – 'a wretched affair' – and The Birds. She set up her own production company with Alec Guinness to make The Scapegoat, as she thought him perfect for the central role, but hated the result: 'not one word of mine in the screenplay and the whole story changed'. She also objected to the portrayal of her husband, as played by Dirk Bogarde, in Richard Attenborough's A Bridge Too Far.

Autobiography: 1977, Growing Pains.

Du Maurier, George (1834–1896)
English artist and novelist, whose main gift to the screen has been the character of the hypnotic Svengali in his best-known novel, Trilby. Born in Paris, he studied chemistry at University College, London, and art in Paris and Antwerp before working in London as an illustrator (the 1931 production of Trilby was based on his illustrations). He was the father of actor Sir Gerald du Maurier.

Du Maurier, Sir Gerald (1873–1934)
Elegant English actor-manager, in occasional films. The son of artist and novelist Gerald Du Maurier and father of novelist Daphne Du Maurier, he was the most popular stage actor of his day, notable as one of the leaders of a new 'natural' style of acting. On stage from 1894, he created the roles of Captain Hook and Mr Darling in Peter Pan, as well as those of Raffles and Bulldog Drummond. At the invitation of Basil Dean, he became chairman of Dean's company Associated Talking Pictures towards the end of his career. He loathed filming, resorting to it only after his stage productions had failed and he needed money. He was knighted in 1922. Died of cancer.

Biography: 1934, Gerald: A Portrait by Daphne du Maurier. 1989, Gerald du Maurier by James Harding.

❝ Making films is a heart-breaking business even in the most up-to-date studio, worked with every conceivable gadget; and when a scene, consisting of two lines and a movement to a door, has been played for the fortieth time, and is still not right, and it's hours over time and you've a headache like a load of bricks and an empty stomach, there was nothing, according to Gerald, which bore a greater similarity to unadulterated hell. – Daphne du Maurier

We really thought, looking at him, that it was easy; and for the first ten years of our life in the theatre, nobody could hear a word we said. We thought he was being really natural; of course, he was a genius of a technician giving that appearance, that's all. – Sir Laurence Olivier

✪ For being the cynical tough guy the 70s seemed to want. Dirty Harry.

“ I like to play the line and not wander too far to either side. If a guy has just had a bad day in the mines and wants to see a good shoot-'em-up, that's great. – C.E.

My involvement goes deeper than acting or directing. I love every aspect of the creation of motion pictures and I guess I'm committed to it for life. – C.E.

Whatever success I've had is due to a lot of instinct and a little luck. – C.E.

I've always had the ability to say to the audience, watch this if you like, and if you don't, take a hike. – C.E.

I try to approach film intellectually – how it moves me. If you start below the intellectual level, I think you're starting without the nucleus. – C.E.

I always cry when I watch myself on screen. – C.E.

I've actually had people come up to me and ask me to autograph their guns. – C.E.

I've never worked with a guy who was less conscious of his good image. – Don Siegel of C.E.

Epstein, Julius J. and Philip G.
(1909–2000 and 1909–1952)
American twin screenwriters and producers. Born in New York, where, as schoolchildren, they worked in their father's livery stables, they studied at Penn State University. Julius went to Hollywood first, to ghostwrite for producer and writer Jerry Wald, whose radio column he had helped to write while working as a press agent in New York. (The character of Julian Blumberg in Ben Schulberg's Hollywood novel What Makes Sammy Run? is based on Julius.) Philip followed soon after. They were famously abrasive while working for Jack Warner for seventeen years. When Warner told them to report for work at 9 am, saying, 'even bank presidents get in at nine,' they sent him a partly completed script with the note, 'have the bank president finish it.' On another occasion, unhappy with their work, Warner demanded that they repay their salaries. 'I'd like to give it back, but I've built a pool with it,' said Philip. 'However, if you're ever in the neighborhood, feel free to use it.' Warner tried to get his own back, naming them during the HUAC investigation of communism in Hollywood, and testifying, 'I don't trust 'em; they're brothers.' The Epsteins later received a questionnaire, in which the first question was whether they had ever been a member of a subversive organisation. 'Yes,' they replied. 'Warner Bros,' after which they heard no more.

The first of Julius' two wives (1936-49) was actress Frances Sage. Philip died from cancer, possibly triggered by treatment he received after suffering from poison oak while scouting locations for Forever Female.

❝ As a young actress I always had a rule. If I didn't understand a line I always said it as though it were improper. – E.E.

Comedy, dear, is just like blowing powder puffs out of a cannon. – E.E.

Acting with her was heaven. It was like being in your mother's arms. – Sir Michael Redgrave

The dame, great actress though she was, resembled a gifted amateur. She didn't really know what she was doing. What she had was an infallible ear for the turn of a speech, or a line, and what she did was entirely instinctive, and executed without much thought, imagination, or guile. – Sir Robert Stephens

I always thought of her as Florence Nightingale, amazed at her own genius and guarding it like a dragon for fear it would get out of hand, and she forwent so many of her natural impulses to devote her whole being to preserve it and present it to the best possible advantage. – Sir John Gielgud

Fairbanks, Douglas (1883–1939) (Douglas Ullman)
Swashbuckling American star of the silent screen, the acrobatic, zestful, ever-smiling hero of many comedies and costume adventures, almost all of which he produced himself. Despite long stage experience, sound did not suit him, and his 30s films showed a marked decline. He had a famous marriage with Mary Pickford, and in 1919, with Chaplin and Griffith, they were co-founders of United Artists Film Corporation. Posthumous AA 1939 'for his unique and outstanding contribution to the international development of the motion picture'.

Biography: 1953, The Fourth Musketeer by Elton Thomas. 1976, The Fairbanks Album by Richard Schickel. 1977, His Majesty the American by John C. Tibbetts and James M. Welsh.

“ Quotes about the elder Fairbanks all point the same way; despite his comparatively short stature, he was much larger than life. 'He has such verve. We can use his body, said D. W. Griffith.'

From that day Fairbanks kept himself in rigorous training, believing that: 'The man that's out to do something has to keep in high gear all the time.'

He managed. An anonymous critic in 1920 put his finger on the Fairbanks magic: 'He smiles, and you feel relieved.'

Alistair Cooke called him: 'A sort of Ariel', and added: 'At a difficult period in American history, Douglas Fairbanks appeared to know all the answers.'

Director Allan Dwan commented: 'Stunt men have had to imitate him and it always looked like a stunt when they did it. With him it always looked right.'

But Mary Pickford, who should know, had a minority view: 'In his private life Douglas always faced a situation in the only way he knew, by running away from it.'

Fairbanks, Jnr, Douglas (1909–2000)
American leading man who has spent much time in Britain; of more conventional debonair mould than his father, he spent as much time in drawing rooms as on castle battlements, but was at home in any surroundings. During the early 50s, produced and sometimes played in innumerable TV half-hours under the title Douglas Fairbanks Presents.

Faulkner, W. G. (1864– *)
English journalist, a former teacher, with claims to being the first regular newspaper film critic in Britain. He reviewed films for the London Evening News from 1910–21.

Faulkner, William (1897–1962)
Distinguished American novelist of the South who spent time in Hollywood. Born in Oxford, Mississippi, he set the majority of his novels, including those that were filmed, in the mythical county of Yoknapatawpha. He went to Hollywood in the early 30s to work first at MGM with director Howard Hawks, with whom he became friendly; he also began an affair with Hawks's secretary. He later worked for Fox and MGM again, though his reputation for heavy drinking and his lack of interest in movies was a hindrance. He sold the screen rights to The Unvanquished to MGM for $25,000, but the film was never made. He returned to Warner's in the 40s, when he was in debt and all his novels were out of print, on a junior writer's pay of $300 a week. There, he worked on 17 screenplays, of which 11 were produced, and two gained him on-screen credits. As a favour to Hawks in the 50s he wrote a script of the religious novel The Left Hand of God, which was never filmed, and worked briefly on Hawks's Egyptian epic, The Land of the Pharaohs, asking the director if it was all right to write the pharaoh 'like a Kentucky colonel'. He later turned down offers to write the screenplays for some of his own novels. He was awarded the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1949. The character of the writer in the Coen Brothers' 1991 film Barton Fink is partly based on him.

“I don't like the climate, the people, their way of life. Nothing ever happens and then one morning you wake up and find that you are sixty-five. – W.F. on Hollywood

I feel that I have made a bust at moving picture writing and therefore have mis-spent and will continue to mis-spend time which at my age I cannot afford. – W.F. to Jack Warner, 1945

Artists in America don't have to have privacy because they don't need to be artists as far as America is concerned. America doesn't need artists because they don't count in America; artists have no more place in American life than the employers of the weekly pictorial magazines have in the private life of a Mississippi novelist. – W.F.

My ambition is to put everything into one sentence – not only the present but the whole past on which it depends and which keeps overtaking the present, second by second. – W.F.

Faust, Johann (1488–1541)
These at least are the approximate dates of a German conjurer, the scanty details of whose wandering life were the basis of plays by Marlowe (1593) and later Goethe (1808) which turned into classics. The theme of the man who sells his soul to the Devil in exchange for a rich full life has been seen in innumerable film versions, including many musical ones based on Gounod's opera, and a puppet one from Czechoslovakia. The first straight version was made in France in 1905; the most famous silent version is Murnau's of 1926, with Emil Jannings and Gosta Ekman. 1941 brought Dieterle's All That Money Can Buy, from Stephen Vincent Benet's The Devil and Daniel Webster; René Clair's version, La Beauté du Diable, followed in 1949, Alias Nick Beal in the same year, Autant-Lara's Marguerite de la Nuit in 1955, Damn Yankees in 1958 and Richard Burton's Dr Faustus in 1967. There were modernized versions in France 63, USA 64 and Rumania 66, and a Spanish version of 1957, Faustina, in which the hero becomes a heroine. The latest variations on the theme are Bedazzled 67, a comic extravaganza with Peter Cook as the tempter and Dudley Moore as the tempted and Hammersmith Is Out 72 with Richard Burton and Peter Ustinov.

Fay, Frank (1897–1961) (Francis Anthony Donner)
American comedian, a star of vaudeville and Broadway, who made a few undistinguished films. Born in San Francisco, he was on stage from the age of four. His later career was hampered by his heavy drinking, and he spent the 30s in obscurity until unexpectedly scoring his biggest success in the mid-40s as the alcoholic Elwood P. Dowd, whose friend is a giant, invisible rabbit, in the play Harvey. He was noted for his self-confident wit. Once, after a court appearance, his lawyer complained, 'I told you to answer simply. The other lawyer asked, "What is your profession?" How could you answer, "I'm the greatest comedian in the world"?' Fay replied, 'I was under oath, wasn't I?' His third wife was actress Barbara Stanwyck (1928–35).

Faye, Alice (1915–1998) (Ann Leppert)
American leading lady of the 30s and 40s, once a singer with Rudy Vallee's band. Her wry expression tended to limit her roles, but she was a key star of her time and commanded a loyal following. Born in New York City, she began in her teens as a dancer and, after a succession of forgettable movies for Twentieth Century-Fox, made her mark in musicals and became a star with In Old Chicago. Her movie career came to an end in the mid-40s (apart from a couple of unsuccessful later appearances) after a series of disputes with Darryl Zanuck, who promoted the career of Betty Grable instead. Married twice, first to singer Tony Martin (1937–40), and, in 1941, to bandleader Phil Harris.

Ferber, Edna (1887–1968)
American novelist and dramatist. Born in Kalamazoo, Michigan, she began as a journalist, though she had hoped to be an actress. She became a Broadway playwright and best-selling novelist, winning a Pulitzer Prize in 1924. She had an acerbic wit: when the New Yorker gave a bad review to a film based on one of her stories and blamed her for it, she wrote to the editor, 'Will you kindly inform the moron who runs your motion picture department that I did not write the movie? Also inform him that Moses did not write the motion picture entitled The Ten Commandments.'

Biography: 1978, Ferber by Julia Goldsmith Gilbert.

Fields, W. C. (1879–1946) (William Claude Dukinfield)
Red-nosed, gravel-voiced, bottle-hitting, misogynist American comedian around whose intolerance and eccentric habits many legends have been built. After a hard life as a tramp juggler, his off-beat personality found a niche in silent films, though sound was necessary to his full flowering as a screen personality. Many of his routines were made up as he went along; once he sold for $25,000 a storyline written on the back of an envelope.

Today the centre of a cult which would have astonished him, W. C. Fields was one of life's genuine oddballs, able to see the funny side of his own misanthropy and to turn it to commercial use. In most of his films he was strait-jacketed, but the few he controlled personally are uniquely Fieldsian, anarchic and paceless, fantasticated versions of his unyielding private life with a few in-jokes for good measure. They feature such characters as:

J. Frothingham Waterbury
Ogg Ogilvie
Filthy McNasty
Ouliotta Haemoglobin
F. Snoopington Pinkerton
Elmer Prettywillie
T. Frothingwell Bellows
A. Pismo Clam
Ambrose Wolfinger
Egbert Souse
Cuthbert J. Twillie
Larson E. Whipsnade

Fields' own pseudonyms, either for professional use on his screenplays or merely to conceal a new bank account, include:

Primrose Magoo
Mahatma Kane Jeeves
Otis Criblecoblis
Ampico J. Steinway
Charles Bogle
Felton J. Satchelstern

Rod Steiger impersonated him in an inaccurate 1976 film of his life, W. C. Fields and Me, from a book by his mistress Carlotta Monti.

✪ For making a disreputable character almost entirely sympathetic; and for moments of inspired surrealism. It's a Gift.

❝ He had a splendid command of the English language which effectively silenced criticisms when he was cast as Micawber in David Copperfield. His nasal delivery and orotund phrasing were imitated the world over, and they are essential to the effectiveness of such oft-quoted lines as: 'I must have a drink of breakfast.', or: 'Somebody left the cork out of my lunch.', or (of an elderly lady dressed to kill): 'She's all done up like a well-kept grave.', or: 'I exercise extreme self control. I never drink anything stronger than gin before breakfast.', or: 'If at first you don't succeed, try again. Then quit. No use being a damn fool about it.', or: 'There's an Ethiopian in the fuel supply.', or: 'I never vote for anyone. I always vote against.'

His oaths were splendid, consisting of such watered-down versions of profanity as 'Godfrey Daniel!' or 'Great Mother of Pearl!' He was indeed a profane and outlandish man. When his lady neighbour in Beverly Hills came out to remonstrate with him for standing in the middle of his new green lawn and shooting the singing birds with a rifle, he is alleged to have growled: 'I'll go on shooting the bastards till they learn to shit green …'

When another lady, an inquiring journalist this time, asked why he never drank water, he gave the simple reason: 'Fish fuck in it.'

He occasionally mentioned to acquaintances that he was involved in charity work, and when asked what charity he would murmur: 'The F.E.B.F.' When an explanation of the initials was requested, it was given as: 'Fuck Everyone but Fields.'

As his biographer Robert Lewis Taylor said: 'His main purpose seemed to be to break as many rules as possible and cause the maximum amount of trouble for everybody.'

He hated children and animals, and once said of a churlish friend: 'Anyone who hates small dogs and children can't be all bad.'

It is of course alleged that when co-starring with Baby Le Roy he spiked the infant's milk with gin, and when Le Roy proved unfit for further work that day stalked around yelling: 'The kid's no trouper!'

He hated women too: 'Women are like elephants. I like to look at them but I wouldn't want to own one.', and: 'A woman drove me to drink. I never had the courtesy to thank her for it.'

But he was essentially impartial: 'I am free of all prejudices. I hate everybody equally.'

❝ If you're trying to raise money to make your script, almost by definition you have to write something that the people with the money will understand. When I handed in the early draft of Short Stories, which is a feature length script, an executive weighed it in his hand and said, 'How long is this?' I said an hour and a half, two hours. He said: 'Feels more like 45.' The executives go on the basis that a page of script is a minute of screen time. – M.F.

It's a bald fact that bigger means more expensive to produce – as soon as you cross that line, you have to make compromises. – M.F.

The biggest problem with studio films is that they are not good enough any more. And the reason they are not good enough is because they cannot trust the individual vision of the film-maker. There is simply too much money at stake. – M.F.

Finch, Peter (1916–1977) (William Mitchell)
British leading actor in British and US films. Born in London, he was brought up in France and Australia. In films in Australia from 1937, he made his stage debut in 1939, as a stooge to a comedian, and was on the British stage from 1949. Married three times, he had much-publicized affairs with actresses Kay Kendall, Vivien Leigh and Mai Zetterling, among others. His off-stage and -screen antics, as a hard-drinking womanizer, sometimes obscured his abilities as one of the best film actors of his time.

❝ Good acting should teach people to understand rather than judge. – P.F.

An Australian outlaw character, wild and unruly, who despised himself for having become an actor – Mai Zetterling

He was a piss-pot and a hell-raiser, but he was also a happy drunk, a gigglebum and very, very good company. – Yolande Finch

My first and lasting impression of Finchie was of a withdrawn man with a quiet assurance in his own ability as a remarkable actor which belied his vulnerability. – Trader Faulkner

He was a deeply complex man. Film acting is not just acting, it's catching something about the essence of a personality very often, and I think that's what makes someone extraordinary in movies, and it was Peter's complexity that was inescapable. I remember sometimes he'd suddenly stop and say, 'I've lost it! I've lost it! Please don't let's do any more!' – John Schlesinger

Famous line (Network) 'I want you to get up right now and go to the window, open it and stick your head out and yell "I'm mad as hell, and I'm not going to take this any more!"'

Finney, Albert (1936–)

English leading actor of stage and screen; also a producer and occasional director. Born in Salford, Lancashire, he trained at RADA and was on stage, at the Birmingham Repertory, from 1956. After success came in 1960 with the stage role of Billy Liar (played on film by Tom Courtenay), he joined the National Theatre, and was its mainstay in the mid-70s. He set up his own production company, Memorial Enterprises, in the mid-60s. His attitude to film has been ambivalent: after his exuberant performances in Saturday Night and Sunday Morning and Tom Jones made him a star, he deliberately disappeared from view for a year and has resisted attempts to turn him into a Hollywood leading man. Married actresses Joan Wenham and Anouk Aimée. He has been romantically linked with actresses Samantha Eggar, Billie Whitelaw, Jacqueline Bisset, Shelley Winters, Rita Moreno and Diana Quick.

Fisher, Eddie (1928–) (Edwin Jack Fisher)

American pop singer in occasional films. Born in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, he was performing on radio from the age of 12, became a protege of Eddie Cantor in his early 20s and was one of the most successful singers of the 50s, making many hit recordings. His marriage (1955-59) to his first wife Debbie Reynolds, when they were publicised as 'America's Sweethearts', led to an unsuccessful attempt to make him a film star. Their daughter is actress and writer Carrie Fisher. Later attempts to become a producer failed; in 1970, he filed for bankruptcy. Hampered by an addiction to prescription drugs, his career faltered for a time before continuing with nightclub and Las Vegas performances. His wives included actresses Elizabeth Taylor and Connie Stevens. He was romantically linked with Marlene Dietrich, Ann-Margret, Edie Adams, Judy Garland, Stephanie Powers, Maria Schell, and Nathalie Delon.

Fitzgerald, Ella (1917–1996)
Mellifluous American jazz singer and occasional actress, one of the greatest interpreters of popular song. She began her career by winning a talent contest at the age of 16, and later sang with Chick Webb's band in the 30s, taking over as leader for two years after his death before becoming a solo performer from the early 40s; her greatest achievement came in the 50s with a series of 'Songbooks', albums devoted to the works of George Gershwin, Cole Porter, Rodgers and Hart and others.

Fitzgerald, F. Scott (1896–1940)
American novelist and chronicler of 'the jazz age' who made several disastrous forays into working in Hollywood, even taking a screen test in the late 20s at the urging of actress Lois Moran: the verdict was that he was too old to act in films. He first went there in 1927 to work unsuccessfully for United Artists, returning in 1931 under a weekly contract to MGM to adapt The Red-Headed Woman for Jean Harlow; but he was drinking heavily, behaving badly, and was sacked after a few weeks. He turned down offers to return in the early 30s, but went back in 1937, when he was in debt, to work for MGM at $1,000 a week for six months, with an option on an additional year at $1,250 a week. The offer came from story editor Edwin Knopf, who had earlier written The Wedding Night for Goldwyn, starring Gary Cooper and Anna Sten in roles based on Fitzgerald and his wife, Zelda. He stayed for 18 months, receiving his only screen credit, as co-writer on Three Comrades 38. He also began an affair with columnist Sheilah Graham. (Beloved Infidel, her story of their affair, in which he was played by Gregory Peck, was filmed in 1959.) Walter Wanger then hired him, at $1,500 a week, to write a film, Winter Carnival, about a college love affair. He went with co-writer Budd Schulberg to Dartmouth on a disastrously drunken research trip and was sacked. (Schulberg wrote a novel, The Disenchanted, about the experience.) He tinkered with a few scripts after that, and wrote a novel, The Last Tycoon, with its character of Monroe Stahr based on MGM producer Irving Thalberg. His novels and stories have fared better in Hollywood than his screenplays.

❝As long past as 1930, I had a hunch that the talkies would make even the best-selling novelist as archaic as silent pictures. – F.S.F.

Isn't Hollywood a dump, in the human sense of the word. A hideous town, pointed up by the insulting gardens of its rich, full of the human spirit at a new low of debasement. – F.S.F.

For nineteen years, with two years out for sickness, I've written best-selling entertainment, and my dialogue is supposedly right at the top. But I learn from the script that you've suddenly decided that it isn't good dialogue and you can take a few hours off and do better. – F.S.F. to Joseph Mankiewicz

Scott Fitzgerald wrote very bad spoken dialogue. – Joseph Mankiewicz

Fitzgerald, Geraldine (1914–2005)
Irish leading lady who played in British films from 1935; went to Hollywood in 1939 but had rather disappointing roles. Born in Dublin, she began acting there with the Gate Theatre company. In the 70s, she made a stage comeback as a folk singer and in the 80s directed stage plays. Patrick Hamilton based the character of Neta on her in his novel, Hangover Square, which was subsequently filmed. Her lovers included Orson Welles. She was the mother of director Michael Lindsay-Hogg.

❝I took it to the biggest of the distributors first – Paramount. When the film was over, they all pulled themselves together and got up in a rather dull way, I thought, and silently left the room. The manager came up to me and very kindly put his arm around my shoulders and told me that he was terribly sorry, but it was a film that just couldn't be shown to the public – R.F. on Nanook of the North

His films slip so easily into the stream of fictional cinema that they hardly seem like documentaries at all. – Andrew Sarris

World-famous and world-loved, his standing in his own profession was nil. You might suppose that a master film director who would work for a salary normally paid an assistant would be in great demand, but that is not the way of things in the film world. – Richard Griffith

Flanagan, Bud (1896–1968) (Reuben Weinthrop)
Genial English comedian, singer and composer of sentimental songs. Born in London, he began as 'Fargo the Boy Wizard' before emigrating at the age of 14 to America; he worked as a blackface act, and appeared with many partners (Harlem and Bronx, Flanagan and Roy, Flanagan and Hunter, etc.), only becoming successful when he joined singer Florrie Forde's company and she teamed him with Chesney Allen. The pair were part of The Crazy Gang from 1931. After Allen retired in the 40s, he continued as a solo act. He wrote the song 'Underneath the Arches', and popularized such songs as 'Strolling' and 'Maybe Because I'm a Londoner'.

Flynn, Errol (1909–1959)

Swashbuckling Australian-born leading man in Hollywood, who by his handsome impudence maintained a worldwide following for nearly 20 years before hard living got the better of him. Born in Hobart, Tasmania, the son of an academic, he was educated briefly at the University of Tasmania, and after various dubious enterprises and escapades, he began his acting career proper in the English repertory theatre before gaining a contract with Warner's. He became an American citizen in 1942. He wrote a novel, Showdown 46, which in its original, unpublished version included savage caricatures of Jack Warner and director Michael Curtiz. Married three times: his first wife was actress Lili Damita (1935–42) and his third, actress Patrice Wymore. He was the father of actor and journalist Sean Flynn. His lovers included actresses Lupe Velez, Olivia de Havilland, Joan Bennett, Ann Sheridan and Ida Lupino. According to biographer Charles Higham, Flynn was also a Nazi sympathizer and a bisexual whose lovers included Tyrone Power, Howard Hughes and Truman Capote. He was played by Guy Pearce in a biopic, My Forgotten Man 93 and by Jude Law in The Aviator 04.

His definitive appearances were the title roles in Captain Blood and The Adventures of Robin Hood, as Major Geoffrey Vickers in The Charge of the Light Brigade, Captain Richard Courtney in The Dawn Patrol, Captain Geoffrey Thorpe in The Sea Hawk, General Custer in They Died with Their Boots On, James Corbett in Gentleman Jim, Soames Forsyte in That Forsyte Woman, and as his idol and fellow-drunk John Barrymore in Too Much, Too Soon.

✿ For living several lives in half of one, and almost getting away with it. The Adventures of Robin Hood.

❝ He was one of the wild characters of the world, said Ann Sheridan. His wicked wicked ways were well known, but nobody ever admitted to disliking him for them; perhaps because, as Jack L. Warner said: 'To the Walter Mittys of the world he was all the heroes in one magnificent, sexy, animal package.'

Yakima Canutt added: 'I think any man who had his appeal for women would have played it just the way he did – a bit wild.'

Henry King's view was that 'He loved to talk about how much he could drink and the women he'd made love to, but most of it was just the rationalizations of a disappointed moralist.'

Bette Davis said: 'Basically a nice man, and very honest about the fact that he knew he didn't have much talent.'

Old drinking cronies like David Niven (who shared with him a house called Cirrhosis-by-the-sea) and Peter Finch later talked of him with affection. Lewis Milestone perhaps exaggerated slightly when he said: 'His faults harmed no one but himself.'

But even the people he did jar against seem to have borne him little ill-will, with the possible exception of the Australian creditors from whom he escaped before going to Hollywood. In a later broadcast to the people down under, he said jovially: 'If there's anyone listening to whom I owe money, I'm prepared to forget it if you are.'

Gene Autry said: 'He spent more time on a bar stool, or in court, or in the headlines, or in bed, than anyone I knew.'

And David Niven summed up his own experience: 'The great thing about Errol was that you knew precisely where you were with him – because he always let you down.'

A lot of people certainly looked at him and tut-tutted. Herbert Wilcox thought that: 'His love of life defeated his ability as an artist.'

And Leslie Mallory described his life as: 'A fifty-year trespass against good taste.'

There were other ways of looking at his behaviour. One of his wives, Nora Eddington, said rather proudly: 'He wasn't afraid of anything, particularly if there was a challenge to it.'

Some of the things he did were a reaction against being under-employed: 'I felt like an impostor, taking all that money for reciting ten or twelve lines of nonsense a day.'

He defended himself blithely: 'The public has always expected me to be a playboy, and a decent chap never lets his public down.'

And: 'Women won't let me stay single, and I won't let myself stay married.'

He exaggerated cheerfully in the cause of publicity: 'I allow myself to be understood as a colourful fragment in a drab world.'

But he was determined to have a good time: 'I'll live this half of my life, I don't care about the other half.'

He gleefully acknowledged his troubles: 'My difficulty is trying to reconcile my gross habits with my net income.'

And at the end he could say: 'I've had a hell of a lot of fun, and I've enjoyed every minute of it.'

At his passing, Tony Britton cabled Trevor Howard: 'Old Errol died laughing. Can you beat that?'

As Patric Knowles said: 'He didn't give a damn for picture making: he thought it was ridiculous.'

Famous line (The Adventures of Robin Hood) 'It's injustice I hate, not the Normans.'

Famous line (Desperate Journey) 'Now for Australia and a crack at those Japs!'

Fonda, Henry (1905–1982)

Tall, lean American leading actor, the father of Jane and Peter Fonda. He began playing gauche young fellows (cartoonist Al Capp modelled his L'il Abner on Fonda in The Trail of the Loneseome Pine) and graduated to roles of determined integrity and amiable wisdom. Only occasionally did he play against type, notably as a killer in Once Upon a Time in the West. Born in Grand Island, Nebraska, he dropped out of the University of Minnesota to join a local drama company (run by Marlon Brando's mother Dorothy), which he first combined with temporary jobs, before working for small companies and reaching Broadway in The Farmer Takes a Wife, a role he then repeated for Hollywood. He signed a seven-year contract with Twentieth Century-Fox in order to star in The Grapes of Wrath, but disliked most of the roles Darryl Zanuck found for him. In the late 40s and early 50s, he returned to the Broadway stage, appearing with success in Mister Roberts and The Caine Mutiny Court Martial, before recreating his stage role in the film of Mister Roberts, which brought to an end his friendly collaborations with director John Ford. His later films tended to be routine at best, though he had a popular and sentimental success with his last, On Golden Pond, playing opposite his daughter Jane. In 1981, he was given an honorary Oscar 'in recognition of his brilliant achievements'. Married actress Margaret Sullavan (1931–33); Frances Brokaw, mother of Jane and Peter Fonda, who committed suicide in 1950; actress Susan Blanchard (1950–56), the step-daughter of Oscar Hammerstein II; Baronessa Afdera Franchetti (1957–61); and Shirlee Adams (1965–82). His defining performances, at first in films directed by John Ford, were in the title role of The Young Mr Lincoln, as Tom Joad in The Grapes of Wrath, Gil Carter in The Ox-Bow Incident, Wyatt Earp in My Darling Clementine, and Juror No. 8 in Twelve Angry Men.

Ford, Harrison (1892–1957)

American leading man of the silent screen. Born in Kansas City, he was in films from 1916 and was one of the most commercially successful actors of his time, while being noted for reclusiveness, shunning personal publicity and Hollywood itself. He retired in the early 30s.

The Mysterious Mrs M. 17. Food for Scandal 20. Foolish Wives 22. Janice Meredith 24. That Royle Girl 25. Up in Mabel's Room 26. The Girl in the Pullman 27. Three Weekends 28. Love in High Gear 32, many others.

Ford, Harrison (1942–)

American leading actor, the thinking man's action hero, at his best playing tough roles that allow room for a few moral scruples. Born in Chicago, he began acting at Ripon College, Wisconsin, and briefly in the theatre before going to Hollywood, where he was put under contract by Columbia, a studio that provided him with lacklustre roles; after his contract ended, he went to work for Universal, playing bit parts in various television series, such as Gunsmoke and The Partridge Family. In the early to mid-70s, he worked as a self-taught carpenter, while appearing in a few supporting roles; but it was not until Star Wars that he became a star, a status he confirmed by his role as Indiana Jones in Raiders of the Lost Ark and its sequels. Married screenwriter Melissa Mathison, his second wife, in 1983 (separated 01). Publicity-shy, he lives in New York and an 800-acre ranch in Jackson, Wyoming. Current asking price: $25m a movie, plus 15 per cent of the gross.

His best roles so far have been as Han Solo in the Star Wars trilogy, as Indiana Jones, as John Book in Witness, and in the title role in The Fugitive.

Biography: 1993, Harrison Ford by Robert Sellers. 1997, Harrison Ford: Imperfect Hero by Garry Jenkins.

Ford, John (1895–1973) (Sean O'Fearna)

Distinguished Irish-American director who from 1917 made over 125 features, many of them silent westerns. In the 30s he built up to a handful of incomparable human dramas; in the 40s he turned towards roving, brawling, good-natured outdoor action films using a repertory of his favourite actors. His best films are milestones, but he disclaimed any artistic pretensions.

“ The thing about Hollywood is the mind-set that prevails. It works from the assumption that if you're in the movie business, you want all those people to like your film, you want to win an Oscar and you want to have a $100 million gross. That's what having a career in the industry means. – B.F.

The only ambitions I have for the films I make is that they're appreciated as poetical works. Either film is too crude a medium to handle that or else I can't make it do these things. If something doesn't work over a period of time you tend not to be so interested in it. In a way my perception of film has been reduced. – B.F.

My problem is that 40 per cent of me wants to make an entertaining film and 60 per cent of me wants to subvert the idea of movies. It's actually not a very happy way to work. – B.F.

“ I believe women should be sexual. And why not? What a great thing to be: a sexual woman, coming of age and discovering sensuality and the intoxification of it. I've seen so many movies about women who don't like sex and really don't want to have sex, or have that posey stuff in Calvin Klein ads. Well, that's just not true and I'm sick of that myth being out there. What I'd like to do is develop movies that better reflect my generation of women. – J.F.

Gable, Clark (1901–1960)
American leading man who kept his popularity for nearly thirty years, and was known as the 'king' of Hollywood. His big ears were popular with caricaturists; his impudent grin won most female hearts. Born in Cadiz, Ohio, he began acting in his teens, marrying his first teacher, Josephine Dillon, and, after failing to find work in Hollywood, making it to the Broadway stage. He married Ria Langham, a wealthy Texan woman, in 1931, a year after his divorce, as his screen career began at MGM. Before long, he was important enough for Louis B. Mayer to find somebody else to take the blame for a manslaughter charge, following a drink-driving accident. His career at the studio began to decline in the late 40s and was over by the mid-50s. His defining roles were as Dennis Carson in Red Dust, Peter Warne in It Happened One Night, Fletcher Christian in Mutiny on the Bounty, Blackie Norton in San Francisco, Rhett Butler in Gone with the Wind, Vic Norton in The Hucksters, and Gay Langland in The Misfits. Also married actress Carole Lombard (1939–42), Lady Sylvia Ashley, the widow of Douglas Fairbanks (1949–52), and, in 1955, Kay Spreckels, dying of a heart attack before their son, John Clark Gable, was born, just after he completed The Misfits. His lovers included Joan Crawford, Jean Harlow, Elizabeth Allan and Grace Kelly.

❂ For effortlessly maintaining a Hollywood legend, and for doing so with cheerful impudence. Gone with the Wind.

“ The King of Hollywood? He modestly disclaimed the title, but there was sense to it: he always seemed to [illegible] in charge. As the New York Times said: 'Gable was as certain as the sunrise. He was consistently and stubbornly all man.'

He said himself: 'The only reason they come to see me is that I know life is great – and they know I know it.'

And again: 'I'm no actor and I never have been. What people see on the screen is me.'

What they saw, they liked. Publicity man Ralph Wainwright said: 'All of his life people turned around to stare at him.'

This was remarkable considering his famous physical drawback, well phrased by Howard Hughes: 'His ears made him look like a taxicab with both doors open.'

Milton Berle called him: 'The best ears of our lives.'

It didn't stop him from influencing the world, and not only the female half of it. Historian Frederick Lewis Allen recalled that: 'When Clark Gable in It Happened One Night disclosed that he wore no undershirt, the knitwear manufacturers rocked from the shock to their sales.'

But Gable disclaimed his sexual reputation: 'Hell, if I'd jumped on all the dames I'm supposed to have jumped on – I'd have had no time to go fishing.'

Eve Arden remembered: 'He used to claim that he was very dull in bed.'

Carole Lombard confirmed this: 'Listen, he's no Clark Gable at home.'

And her husband nodded ruefully: 'I can't emote worth a damn.'

David Selznick knew the secret: 'Gable has enemies all right, but they all like him.'

Gable himself summed up: 'This King stuff is pure bull. I eat and drink and go to the bathroom just like anybody else. I'm just a lucky slob from Ohio who happened to be in the right place at the right time.'

And seven years after his death, Joan Crawford could say: 'He was king of an empire called Hollywood. The empire is not what it was – but the king has not been dethroned, even after death.'

Famous line (It Happened One Night) 'Behold the walls of Jericho!'

Famous line (Gone with the Wind) 'Frankly, my dear, I don't give a damn.'

Gance, Abel (1889–1981)

French producer-director, in films since 1910. Pioneer of wide-screen techniques.

Gance's Napoleon had sterling qualities which were never properly noted because of its length, its wide-screen reels, and the fact that silents were overwhelmed by sound soon after its release. In the late 70s, however, film scholar Kevin Brownlow assembled a five-hour version to which Thames TV added a newly commissioned musical score; in this version it was shown again triumphantly in the early 80s, in all the capitals of the world.

Garbo, Greta (1905–1990) (Greta Gustafson)
Swedish leading actress who was taken to Hollywood by her director Mauritz Stiller and became a goddess of the screen, her aloof beauty carefully nurtured by MGM through the late 20s and early 30s. Her early retirement enhanced the air of mystery which has always surrounded her. Special Academy Award 1954 'for her unforgettable screen performances'. Her lovers included actor John Gilbert, conductor Leopold Stokowski, writer Mercedes De Acosta and photographer Cecil Beaton.

Biography: 1955, Garbo by John Bainbridge. 1970, Garbo by Norman Zierold. 1992, Conversations with Greta Garbo by Sven Broman. 1994, Loving Garbo by Hugo Vickers. 1994, Greta and Cecil by Diana Souhami. 1997, Greta Garbo: A Life Apart by Karen Swenson.

❂ For stretching a mystery over twelve splendid years and for knowing when to quit. Queen Christina.

❝ Boiled down to essentials, she is a plain mortal girl with large feet. –

So wrote Herbert Kretzmer, sick of the 'sphinx' image, which in the early 30s was overpowering. Alistair Cooke called her: 'Every man's harmless fantasy mistress. She gave you the impression that, if your imagination had to sin, it could at least congratulate itself on its impeccable taste.'

Life in 1928 hailed her thus: 'She is the dream princess of eternity, the knockout of the ages.'

Richard Watts Jnr called her: 'That fascinating, inscrutable, almost legendary personage …'

The New York Mirror said: 'Her alluring mouth and volcanic, slumbrous eyes stimulate men to such passion that friendships collapse.'

Graham Greene in his review of Conquest defined her: 'A great actress? Oh, undoubtedly, one wearily assents, but what dull pompous films they make for her, hardly movies at all so retarded are they by her haggard equine renunciations, the slow consummation of her noble adulteries!'

To Clare Boothe Luce she was: 'A deer in the body of a woman, living resentfully in the Hollywood zoo.'

A 1929 critic said: 'She is a woman who marches to some unstruck music, unheard by the rest of us.'

Rouben Mamoulian thought her: 'A wonderful instrument.'

Even the sensible Lilian Gish considered that: 'Garbo's temperament reflected the rain and gloom of the long dark Swedish winters.'

More recently Ken Tynan remarked: 'What when drunk one sees in other women, one sees in Garbo sober.'

Remoteness was part of her charm. To Fredric March: 'Co-starring with Garbo hardly constituted an introduction.'

To James Wong Howe, the famous cameraman: 'She was like a horse on the track. Nothing, and then the bell goes, and something happens.'

But the image always had its knockers, including the lady herself: 'I never said, I want to be alone. I only said I want to be let alone.'

(She did say it actually, but in Grand Hotel.) She added: 'My talent falls within definite limits. I'm not a versatile actress.'

She also said with a smile: 'I'm a woman who's unfaithful to a million men.'

But the fact is, men were not her fans. It was women who queued to see her suffer. J. Robert Rubin of MGM noted in wonder: 'Garbo was the only one we could kill off. The Shearer and Crawford pictures had to end in a church, but the public seemed to enjoy watching Garbo die.'

George Cukor, who directed her several times, thought: 'She is a fascinating actress but she is limited. She must never create situations. She must be thrust into them. The drama comes in how she rides them out.'

When she suddenly retired in 1941, her reason, given much later, was: 'I had made enough faces.'

And: 'Being in the newspapers is awfully silly to me. I have nothing to contribute.'

David Niven commented: 'The longer she stayed away, the stronger and stranger the Garbo myth grew.'

In the 70s, thirty years after her retirement, her movies were still making money all over the world and the lady herself was front-page news. You can't kill a legend. And it wasn't the movies that kept the interest; as Richard Whitehall remarked: 'Subtract Garbo from most of her films, and you are left with nothing.'

Isobel Quigley remained undecided: 'I can't make up my mind whether Garbo was a remarkable actress or simply a person so extraordinary that she made everything she did, including acting, seem remarkable.'

C. Aubrey Smith's appraisal was the oddest of all: 'She's a rippin' gel.'

Christopher Isherwood pondered her appeal: 'I suppose everybody who meets Garbo dreams of saving her – either from herself, or from Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, or from some friend or lover. And she always eludes them by going into an act. That is what has made her a universal figure. She is the woman whose life everyone wants to interfere with.',

If you're going to die on screen, you've got to be strong and in good health. – G.G.

Famous line (Ninotchka) 'Don't make an issue of my womanhood.'

Famous line (Anna Christie) 'Gimme visky, ginger ale on the side. And don't be stingy, baby.'

Famous line (Queen Christina) 'I have been memorizing this room. In the future, in my memory, I shall live a great deal in this room.'

Gardner, Ava (1922–1990)
American leading actress of the 40s and 50s, once voted the world's most beautiful woman. Born in Grabtown, North Carolina, she intended to become a secretary, but began her film career after a talent scout spotted her photograph in her brother-in-law's shop window, and she was put under contract to MGM. It was not until she made The Killers that her potential was noted, though she continued to star in unmemorable films. The few roles that allowed her to be more than a beautiful woman were as Julie in Show Boat, though her singing voice was, to her annoyance, dubbed; as Pandora Reynolds in Pandora and the Flying Dutchman; as Eloise Kelly in Mogambo; as Maria Vargas in The Barefoot Contessa; and as Maxine Falk in The Night of the Iguana. Her performances improved as her looks faded, owing to some heavy drinking and a growing dislike of the restraints of film-making. She retired to live in London. Married actor Mickey Rooney (1942–43), bandleader Artie Shaw (1945–47), and singer Frank Sinatra (1951–57). Her lovers included producer Howard Hughes, matador Luis Miguel Dominguin, and actors Howard Duff and Walter Chiari.

“ Although no one believes me, I have always been a country girl, and still have a country girl's values. – A.G.

No one ever thanked me during all those years when I was the good girl on the lot. I felt like I was in slavery. They may have found me, but I came to feel I owed them, and the business they represented, nothing at all. – A.G.

I'll never forget seeing Bette Davis at the Hilton in Madrid. I went up to her and said, 'Miss Davis, I'm Ava Gardner and I'm a great fan of yours.' And do you know, she behaved exactly as I wanted her to behave. 'Of course you are, my dear,' she said. 'Of course you are.' And she swept on. Now that's a star. – A.G.

Because she looks the way she does, everyone assumes Ava is sophisticated, intelligent and mature. In fact she is none of those things. She is a simple farm girl and she has the mind and mentality of a simple farm girl. – Stanley Kramer

A lady of strong passions, one of them rage. – Mickey Rooney (former husband)

Garland, Judy (1922–1969) (Frances Gumm)

American entertainer and leading lady who for many years radiated the soul of show business. The child of vaudeville performers, on stage from five years old, she later seemed unable to stand the pace of her own success; but her resultant personal difficulties only accentuated the loyalty of her admirers. Special Academy Award 1939 'for her outstanding performance as a screen juvenile'. MGM, who signed her as a teenager both protected her, teaming her with Arthur Freed's production unit to make some memorable musicals, and also exploited her. Addicted to sleeping and pep pills, she grew increasingly self-destructive and was fired by the studio in 1950. She revived her career by returning to the stage at the London Palladium and New York's Palace Theatre. The box-office failure of A Star is Born and her reputation for unreliability meant that she made only a few subsequent films. She continued to make concert appearances, though often hampered by the effects of drugs, heavy drinking and a confused personal life. Died from an overdose of sleeping pills, $4m in debt. Married composer David Rose (1941–45), director Vincente Minnelli (1945–51), producer Sid Luft (1952–65), actor Mark Herron (1965–67), and, in 1969, nightclub manager Mickey Dean. Her lovers included Tyrone Power, Joseph Mankiewitz, Orson Welles, Yul Brynner, Mario Lanza, Fred Finklehoffe and Glenn Ford. She is the mother of actress and singer Liza Minnelli and singer Lorna Luft. She was played by Tammy Blanchard and Judy Davis in the TV movie Life with Judy Garland: Me and My Shadows 01.

Goddard, Paulette (1911–1990) (Marion Levy)

Pert, pretty American leading lady of the early 40s. Born in Whitestone Landing, Long Island, she began as a chorus girl in Ziegfeld shows and made some silent shorts in 1927. At the age of 16, she was briefly married to a rich man, whose settlement left her independently wealthy, and she made her way to Hollywood, where her first break was as a Goldwyn girl. Married (1936-42) Charlie Chaplin, who starred her in Modern Times; gained a reputation as a light comedienne in three films with Bob Hope, and was a leading contender for the role of Scarlett O'Hara in Gone With the Wind, a role she may have lost because there was no evidence that she was actually married to Chaplin. Her third husband (1944-50) was Burgess Meredith, and when her not inconsiderable career petered out, she married writer Erich Maria Remarque. Her lovers included director Antole Litvak. She was also famous for her art collection (29 Impressionist paintings she owned fetched $3.1m at auction in 1979) and her lavish collection of jewellery donated by husbands and admirers. The scene in Shampoo, in which Julie Christie sexually services Warren Beatty under a restaurant table, is based on an alleged incident in her life.

Her best performance was in The Diary of a Chambermaid, one of two films made by the production company she set up with Burgess Meredith. Other notable roles were as Hannah in Modern Times, Joyce Norman in The Cat and the Canary, Mary Carter in The Ghost Breakers, Loxi Claiborne in Reap the Wild Wind, and Joan O'Doul in So Proudly We Hail.

Biography: 1986, Paulette by Joe Morella and Edward Epstein.

❂ For giving the appearance of culture and refinement while keeping his standards modest though irreproachable. Wuthering Heights.

❝ He was the archetypal movie mogul: the glove salesman from Minsk who became more American than apple pie and founded his credo on the family audience. His maxims included: 'Motion pictures should never embarrass a man when he brings his wife to the theatre', and: 'I seriously object to seeing on the screen what belongs in the bedroom.'

He was proud of his art: 'The picture makers will inherit the earth.'

As an executive, he certainly knew his own mind: 'A producer shouldn't get ulcers: he should give them', and: 'I was always an independent, even when I had partners', and: 'In this business it's dog eat dog, and nobody's going to eat me.'

He was a great showman: 'What we want is a story that starts with an earthquake and works its way up to a climax …'

But his logic was all his own: 'I don't care if it doesn't make a nickel. I just want every man, woman and child in America to see it!'

That was about The Best Years of Our Lives. He disdained subtlety. When a harassed publicist devised a campaign that began: 'The directing skill of Rouben Mamoulian, the radiance of Anna Sten and the genius of Samuel Goldwyn have combined to bring you the world's greatest entertainment …'

Goldwyn nodded approval: 'That's the kind of advertising I like. Just the facts. No exaggeration …'

He is said to have telegraphed Eisenstein as follows: 'Have seen your picture (The Battleship Potemkin) and enjoyed it very much. Should like you to do something of the same kind, but cheaper, for Ronald Colman.'

With this kind of gall, it is not surprising that intellectuals like Robert Sherwood continued to relish his company: 'I find I can live with Sam just as one lives with high blood pressure.'

Did he really coin all the famous Goldwynisms which have filled so many books? Not all of them, perhaps. One doubts the authenticity of: 'Directors are always biting the hand that lays the golden egg', and: 'In two words: im-possible', and: 'Tell me, how did you love the picture?', and: 'We have all passed a lot of water since then.'

But I imagine Goldwyn probably did say, rather wittily: 'Gentlemen, kindly include me out', and: 'Let's bring it up to date with some snappy nineteenth-century dialogue', and: 'Anyone who goes to a psychiatrist should have his head examined', and: 'I had a great idea this morning, but I didn't like it', and: 'A verbal contract isn't worth the paper it's written on.'

His film appreciation was untutored but vivid, like his speaking style: 'When everybody's happy with the rushes, the picture's always a stinker', he once said; and he can't have been alone among Hollywood producers in vowing: 'I'd hire the devil himself if he'd write me a good story.'

Lindsay Anderson summed him up in 1974: 'There are lucky ones whose great hearts, shallow and commonplace as bedpans, beat in instinctive tune with the great heart of the public, who laugh as it likes to laugh, weep the sweet and easy tears it likes to weep … Goldwyn is blessed with that divine confidence in the rightness (moral, aesthetic, commercial) of his own intuition – and that I suppose is the chief reason for his success.'

Goldwyn had in fact summed up himself rather nicely: 'I am a rebel. I make a picture to please me. If it pleases me, there is a chance it will please others. But it has to please me first.'

And his son Samuel Goldwyn Jnr was taught the value of his legacy: 'With every picture he made, my father raised the money, paid back the bank, and kept control of the negative. He said, you be careful of these films: some people will tell you they're not worth anything, but don't you believe it.'

Goulding, Edmund (1891–1959)
English-born director, screenwriter, composer, playwright and novelist, in Hollywood, where he was a safe handler of female stars of the 30s and 40s. Born in London, he was on stage from 1904, emigrating to the US in 1915, where he began writing for the movies from the early 20s. In 1925, as a writer and director, he joined MGM, where he was protected from the consequences of several sexual scandals until Mayer fired him in 1936. He then worked for Warner's and Twentieth Century-Fox. He directed four of Bette Davis's films, but he is said to have faked a heart attack while arguing with her on the set of Old Acquaintance in order not to work with her again. Apart from his qualities as a director, he was noted for his ability to invent scenarios, design costumes and compose melodies, which he managed by whistling tunes to an arranger. 'Mam'selle', a ballad based on one of the themes he wrote for The Razor's Edge, was a hit in 1947.

Grable, Betty (1916–1973)
American leading lady who personified the peaches-and-cream appeal which was required in the 40s but which later seemed excessively bland. She performed efficiently in a series of light musicals and dramas, and was the most famous pin-up of World War II. Born in St Louis, she worked in vaudeville from childhood, encouraged by her mother, and began in films in blackface in the chorus line at the age of 13, also singing in her teens with the Ted Fio Rita orchestra. Her success began when Darryl Zanuck signed her for Twentieth Century-Fox after Paramount had dropped her contract; she made an impact in the Broadway musical Du Barry Was a Lady and then replaced Alice Faye in the film Down Argentina Way. By the mid-40s she was the highest-paid star in Hollywood and America's highest-paid woman, forming a successful musical partnership with Dan Dailey. By the early 50s, Zanuck wanted to get rid of her, and she tore up her contract with the studio. In the mid-60s, she performed in theatres, returning to Broadway to replace Martha Raye in Hello Dolly. Died from cancer. Married actor Jackie Coogan (1937–40) and bandleader Harry James (1943–65); she was romantically involved with bandleader Artie Shaw, singer Desi Arnaz, and actor George Raft.

Cary's enthusiasm made him search for perfection in all things, particularly the three that meant most to him – film-making, physical fitness and women. – David Niven

Grant, Hugh (1960–)
Diffident-seeming English leading actor, often in foppish roles. Born in London and educated at Oxford University, he became a star with Four Weddings and a Funeral, and through his high-profile romance with actress Elizabeth Hurley, who is also his partner in a production company. (Public interest in the couple was so strong that, in 1996, the mattress from their holiday home fetched £550 at auction.) In 1995, his career was threatened when he was arrested for committing a lewd act in a car on Sunset Boulevard with Divine Brown, a prostitute who subsequently appeared in a direct-to-video movie, Taken for Granted, featuring a Hugh Grant lookalike.

“ I defy anyone not to have their head turned by megastardom because it is a completely abnormal existence. You live a life of extreme fantasy: you're wonderful, you're paid millions, everyone thinks you're beautiful, brilliant, everyone's gagging to hear your every word, capture your every expression, and then the next day you learn you're ugly, you speak all wrong, you're not talented after all, your last three movies were shit, and you're gone. It's so fast and ruthless. – R.E.G.

“ Nor must George Graves' dressing room be overlooked. Visitors going there found themselves in a sort of crazy chamber. Chairs collapsed when sat upon, cigarettes thrust upon them exploded, pencils refused to write and turned on those wielding them, coat hangers proffered for their coats shut up and threw the garments on the ground, and when the thoroughly startled visitor was offered a drink, he found the liquor pouring all over his waistcoat from cleverly concealed small holes in the chasing on the glass. Royal personages came, saw, even suffered, and laughed good naturedly. – W. J. Macqueen-Pope, Theatre Royal, Drury Lane

“ I do feel for me that cinema has somehow ceased to be a spectator sport. I get tremendous excitement out of making it rather than watching it. – P.G.

We live in a time of excess – excess population, excess information – P.G.

If you want to tell stories, be a writer, not a filmmaker. – P.G.

What is it about Greenaway's films that makes the flesh crawl? I think it's his apparent loathing of the human race. – Ken Russell

If Gucci handbags were still in fashion Greenaway would carry his scripts in them. – Derek Jarman

Greer, Jane(1924–2001) (Bettyjane Greer)
Cool American leading lady of the 40s, a former child model. Born in Washington DC, she was put under contract by Howard Hughes in 1943 after he saw her photograph; she became his lover after the failure of the first of her two marriages, to singer Rudy Vallee (1943-45). Her best performances came in her early career at RKO: she could play good-humoured dames, well-bred ladies or femmes fatales. She retired in the early 50s to raise a family, making only a few appearances thereafter.

Her best roles were for RKO as Janice Bell, the lover deserted by Robert Taylor, in They Won't Believe Me; the duplicitous Kathie Moffat in Out of the Past; and Joan Graham in the thriller The Big Steal; for United Artists as journalist Katy Connors in Run For the Sun; and for Universal-International as Hazel Bennett, Lon Chaney's second wife in the biopic Man of a Thousand Faces.

✪ For enduring the fate of most monuments, and for deserving the tribute in the first place, despite being a personality with clearly unlikeable aspects. Intolerance.

❝ Remember how small the world was before I came along. I brought it all to life: I moved the whole world onto a 20-foot screen. – D.W.G.

He did what he did genuinely, and straight from the heart. His best films are passionate and tender, terrifying and pregnant, works of art certainly, and products too of an imagination far ahead of its time. – Paul O'Dell

It is time D. W. Griffith was rescued from the pedestal of an outmoded pioneer. The cinema of Griffith, after all, is no more outmoded than the drama of Aeschylus. – Andrew Sarris, 1968

Griffith's enormous success was due largely to the fact that his heroes and heroines firmly believed, and practised the belief, that babies are brought by the stork. The lowbrow who believed otherwise was always the Griffith villain. – George Jean Nathan

He was the first to photograph thought, said Cecil B. de Mille. It was quite a compliment. But Griffith was full of contradictions. His brain was progressive, his emotions Victorian. For a few years the two aspects were able to join in public favour, but he could not adapt himself to the brisker pace of the 20s, when he made many such blinkered and stubborn pronouncements as: 'We do not want now and we never shall want the human voice with our films.'

When the inevitable happened in 1928 he declared: 'We have taken beauty and exchanged it for stilted voices.'

He could be tactless too, as when in 1918 he commented: 'Viewed as drama, the war is somewhat disappointing.'

Yet this was the man of whom Gene Fowler could say: 'He articulated the mechanics of cinema and bent them to his flair.'

Lilian Gish, a great admirer of Griffith, said: 'He inspired in us his belief that we were working in a medium that was powerful enough to influence the whole world.'

To Mack Sennett: 'He was my day school, my adult education program, my university … (but) he was an extremely difficult man to know.'

He said himself: 'The task I'm trying to achieve above all is to make you see …'

He knew his own value, as many an actor found when asking for a rise: 'It's worth a lot more than money to be working for me!'

This was true enough up to the time of The Birth of a Nation, which President Wilson described as: 'Like writing history with lightning.'

But it became less so after the box-office flop of Intolerance, which Gene Fowler called: 'The greatest commercial anticlimax in film history.'

He became an embarrassment to Hollywood because his ideas seemed outmoded; in the 30s he scarcely worked at all. When he died in 1948 Hedda Hopper, recalling the marks made by stars in the wet cement at Hollywood's Chinese Theater, said: 'Griffith's footprints were never asked for, yet no one has ever filled his shoes …'

And James Agee added: 'There is not a man working in movies, nor a man who cares for them, who does not owe Griffith more than he owes anyone else.'

Ezra Goodman commented: 'At Griffith's funeral, the sacred cows of Hollywood gathered to pay him homage. A week before, he probably could not have gotten any of them on the telephone.'

It is said indeed that death had to come before such tributes as Frank Capra's: 'Since Griffith there has been no major improvement in the art of film direction.'

And Carmel Myers': 'He was the umbrella that shaded us all.'

And John Simon's: 'Griffith did for film what Sackville and Norton, the authors of Gorboduc, did for drama.'

✪ For a multitude of disguises in which he never allowed humanity to be swamped by dexterity. Father Brown.

❝ I gave my best performances, perhaps, during the war – trying to be an officer and a gentleman. – A.G.

I don't know what else I could do but pretend to be an actor. – A.G.

Once I've done a film, it's finished. I never look at it again. – A.G.

Getting to the theatre on the early side, usually about seven o'clock, changing into a dressing gown, applying make-up, having a chat for a few minutes with other actors and then, quite unconsciously, beginning to assume another personality which would stay with me (but mostly tucked inside) until curtain down, was all I required of life. I thought it bliss. – A.G.

Personally, I have only one great regret–that I never dared enough. If at all. – A.G.

He wrote to tell me that he had just seen A Passage to India, and that as the lights had come up he had vomited in shame at his own performance as Professor Godbole. – Simon Callow

Hagen, Julius (1884–1939)
British producer, a former actor, who founded Twickenhan Film Studios and Real Art Productions in 1929, in partnership with director Leslie Hiscott, to turn out 'quota quickies' to meet the legal requirement of the time for exhibitors to show British films. Directors and writers spent a fortnight writing a script and a fortnight shooting it. He persuaded many leading British actors and some Hollywood ones to appear in his films, including Sydney Howard, Leslie Fuller, Henry Kendall, Sir John Martin-Harvey, Ivor Novello, Gracie Fields, Sir Seymour Hicks, Flanagan and Allen, Edward Everett Horton and Conrad Veidt. He hired D.W. Griffith to remake Broken Blossoms in sound, but Griffith walked out after a disagreement. He ran into trouble trying to make more expensive films and became bankrupt in 1938.

He wrote eleven other books, including Halliwell's Hundred, his choice of favourite films.

Autobiography: 1985, Seats in All Parts.

❝It was an aroma compounded of soft plush and worn carpet and Devon violets and sweat. It was that scent, perhaps, which first made me a film fan; for it was to the Queen's in Bolton that I ventured on my first remembered visit to any cinema, one wet and windy afternoon in 1933, when I was four. – L.H.

Harrison, Sir Rex (1908–1990) (Reginald Carey Harrison)
Debonair British leading actor of pleasant if limited range, on stage since 1924; films only occasionally gave him the right material. Born in Huyton, Lancashire, he joined the Liverpool Repertory Company at the age of 16, began in films in 1929, and made his London stage debut in 1930. In 1936, after an unsuccessful screen test for Warner's, he was signed to an exclusive contract with Alexander Korda, following it with his stage performance in French without Tears which established him as a star and provided him with a type – elegant and charming – that he played for most of his career. In the mid-40s he went to Hollywood under contract to Twentieth Century-Fox, but his stay there came to a sudden end after a scandal resulting from his affair with actress Carole Landis, which ended with her suicide. His best screen performances were as Professor Henry Higgins in My Fair Lady (repeating his stage success), Adolphus Cusins in Major Barbara, Charles Condomine in Blithe Spirit, and Vivian Kenway in The Rake's Progess. His six wives included Lilli Palmer (1942–57), Kay Kendall (1957–59), whom he married knowing that she was dying from leukaemia, a fact he kept from her, and Rachel Roberts (1962–71). He was knighted in 1989.

Harrison Marks, George (1926–1997)

English director of soft porn and limited talent, who deserves a footnote in the history of British cinema because of the ground-breaking success of his film Naked as Nature Intended, ostensibly about nudism but made as an exercise in exploitation, which ran for two years in London. A former music-hall comedian, he first specialized in air-brushed glamour photography for men's magazines. His still and moving pictures owed much to his mentor and lover, actress and nude model Pamela Green. Apart from his listed features, he made comedy shorts for children as well as several hundred shorts and, later, videos for the sex film market. From the mid-80s he specialized in producing a magazine, Kane, and videos devoted to spanking.

“ I think that no actor should take Hollywood too seriously, but at the same time it would be wrong to underestimate its professionalism. Really, Hollywood is a caricature of itself, and in particular this is true of the front-office types at the studios. Their enthusiasm towards you is measured precisely to match the success of your last film. – J.H.

Hawkins, Screamin' Jay (1929–2000) (Jalacy Hawkins)

Hawks, Howard (1896–1977)

American director, at his best an incomparable provider of professional comedies and action dramas. Born in Goshen, Indiana, he studied mechanical engineering at Cornell University; he taught pilots to fly during the First World War and built the racing car that won the Indianapolis 500 in 1936. He began in films in 1917 as a prop boy, became an assistant director and, in the early 20s, ran Famous Players' story department. He began directing in 1926 for Fox, but after the success of The Dawn Patrol was able to work without signing a long-term contract with any studio. Awarded an honorary Oscar in 1974 as 'a master American filmmaker'. Died after a fall at his home. Married three times. His lovers included actresses Joan Crawford, Ann Dvorak , Ella Raines and Dolores Moran.

“ For me the best drama is one that deals with a man in danger. – H.H.

His idea of a great film story was one in which a handsome, tough, masculine man, in a risky predicament and normally at the center of a small professional group, performed valiantly and stoically under great pressure and won a beautiful young woman while doing it. – Todd McCarthy

He stamped his remarkably bitter view of life on adventure, gangster and private eye melodramas, the kind of thing Americans do best and appreciate least. – Andrew Sarris, 1968

I never felt Hawks put great importance on any film. It was like, 'We're doing a film for Chrissakes. If they don't like it, give them their nickel back.' It wasn't all that important, we weren't curing cancer, like a lot of young people think they're doing today. – James Caan

Hawthorne, Nathaniel (1804–1864)

American novelist and short-story writer, of oppressive Puritan attitudes in New England. His The Scarlet Letter, about a woman accused of adultery, has been filmed at least five times, notably in 1926 with Lillian Gish and 1934 with Colleen Moore. An updated version, starring Demi Moore, flopped at the box-office in 1995. The House of Seven Gables was transferred flatly to the screen in 1940, with a cast that included George Sanders, Margaret Lindsay and Vincent Price. His story 'Young Goodman Brown' was even less successfully filmed in 1993 by Peter George.

Hawthorne, Sir Nigel (1929–2001)

English star character actor, best known for his role as Sir Humphrey in the TV sitcom Yes, Minister, for which he won three BFA TV awards. Born in Coventry, Staffordshire, and raised in Cape Town, South Africa, he began on the stage and acted with the Royal Shakespeare Company. He repeated his stage success as George III in the film The Madness of King George. He was knighted in the New Years Honours of 1999. His companion was screenwriter Trevor Bentham (1943-).

Hawtrey, Charles (1914–1988) (George Hartree)

Spindle-shanked English comic actor, long cast as an ageing schoolboy in Will Hay's comedies. In the 60s, he was a familiar member of the Carry On team. Born in Hounslow, Middlesex, he trained at the Italia Conti School and was a boy soprano, on stage from 1925. His alcoholism brought to an end his association with the Carry On series in the early 70s. He retired to live in a cottage on the Kent coast in Deal, where the visiting Kenneth Williams reported, 'as we walked along the front, fishermen eyed us warily. Charlie was in orange trousers, blue shirt and silk scarf at the neck. He was carrying his umbrella as a parasol. The day was quite fine. The rest of us were trying to look anonymous. "Hello lads!" he kept calling out to men painting their boats. "They all adore me here," he told us, "brings a bit of glamour into their dull lives."'

Hay, Will (1888–1949)

British character comedian, one of the screen's greats; after many years in the music halls, starred in several incomparable farces playing variations on his favourite role of an incompetent, seedy schoolmaster. Born in Stockton-on-Tees, he worked as a book-keeper before beginning in the music halls in a schoolmaster sketch in 1909, later joining Fred Karno's troupe and becoming a star attraction from the mid-20s. In private life, he was an expert amateur astronomer who built his own observatory and wrote a book on the subject (1935, Through My Telescope), a pilot and a linguist.

Hayward, Susan (1918–1975) (Edythe Marrener)
Red-haired, vivacious American leading actress, often in aggressive roles. Born in Brooklyn, she began as a model before going to Hollywood to make a screen test for the role of Scarlett O'Hara in Gone with the Wind. She stayed to rid herself of her accent and to learn how to act, beginning with minor roles in Warner films. She was then signed to a seven-year contract by Paramount, whose executives found her difficult and retaliated by giving her poor parts to play. She tried Twentieth Century-Fox, who provided her mainly with a series of uninteresting roles. Her big breakthrough came with I'll Cry Tomorrow, about troubled singer Lillian Roth: during the making of the film she attempted suicide. The first of her two husbands was actor Jess Barker (1944–54); she was romantically involved with actors John Carroll and Don Barry.

Hayworth, Rita (1918–1987) (Margarita Carmen Cansino)
Star American leading actress and dancer of the 40s, often in tempestuous roles, who became a sex symbol of the age with her performance in Gilda. Born in Brooklyn, New York, she was the daughter of an American mother and a Spanish gypsy father, whose dancing had topped the bill in vaudeville. She began as a 12-year-old, in a dance act with her sexually abusive father, before being briefly contracted to Fox as a replacement for Dolores Del Rio. Columbia then signed her, but her success came only after her exploitative first husband made her lose weight, lighten her hair and raise her hairline. Often insecure with dialogue, she was at her best in roles that exploited her dancer's expressive movement: as Judy McPherson in Only Angels Have Wings; as Natalie Roguin in The Lady in Question; as Virgina Brush in The Strawberry Blonde; as Gilda Munson in Gilda; as Elsa Bannister in Orson Welles's The Lady from Shanghai; and as Sadie Thompson in Miss Sadie Thompson. Surprisingly, despite her ability, she was an uneasy partner for Fred Astaire in the two films they made together: You'll Never Get Rich and You Were Never Lovelier. She suffered from Alzheimer's disease from the early 70s, looked after by her daughter with Prince Aly Khan, Princess Yasmin, and was played by Lynda Carter in the 1983 TV movie, Rita Hayworth: The Love Goddess. Married Orson Welles (1943–48), Aly Khan (1949–53), singer Dick Haymes (1953–55), and producer James Hill (1958–61); she was romantically involved with actors Victor Mature, David Niven and Gary Merrill, singer Tony Martin, and producers Howard Hughes and Charles Feldman.

❂For being connected in some way with most of the enjoyable hard-boiled comedies and melodramas with which one associates Hollywood in the 30s and 40s. Nothing Sacred.

“Hollywood held the lure … tremendous sums of money for work that required no more effort than a game of pinochle. – B.H.

Movies are one of the bad habits that have corrupted our century. They have slipped into the American mind more misinformation in one evening than the Dark Ages could muster in a decade. – B.H.

A movie is never any better than the stupidest man connected with it. – B.H.

The movies are an eruption of trash that has lamed the American mind and retarded Americans from becoming cultured people. – B.H.

If you wrote a good movie it was because you were lucky enough to get on the payroll of a classy boss. Classy or not, the boss called the shots and you did as bid. You were a sort of literary errand boy with an oil magnate's income. – B.H.

Writing a good movie brings a writer about as much fame as steering a bicycle. – B.H.

✪ For her unique qualities of understanding, diction and movement; and for winning two Oscars thirty years after being declared box-office poison. The Philadelphia Story.

“ The screen's first lady has never had a lot to say for herself. Her most thoughtful piece of self-analysis was: 'I was fortunate to be born with a set of characteristics that were in the public vogue.'

Cecil Beaton was more poetic than kind in his description: 'She has a face that belongs to the sea and the wind, with large rocking-horse nostrils and teeth that you just know bite an apple every day.'

Robert Hopkins said of her physical angularity: 'You could throw a hat at her, and wherever it hit, it would stick.'

Tennessee Williams thought her a dream actress: 'She makes dialogue sound better than it is by a matchless clarity and beauty of diction, and by a fineness of intelligence and sensibility that illuminates every shade of meaning in every line she speaks.'

One feels too that she brings similar high standards to every corner of her life. She said of herself: 'When I started out, I didn't have any desire to be an actress or to learn how to act. I just wanted to be famous.'

Perhaps only chance kept her from being the first woman president. She obviously has the charm, as Garson Kanin says: 'As the years go by she does not lose her old admirers, she goes on gaining new ones.'

Other self-musings: 'I've had a fascinating life. I don't think I'm the least bit peculiar, but people tell me I am.'

And: 'Acting is the most minor of gifts. After all, Shirley Temple could do it when she was four.'

And: 'We used to laugh so much then. Now everything is so solemn, so joyless. One must laugh. One cannot moan everlastingly.'

And: 'My privacy is my own. I am the one to decide whether it will be invaded.'

And: 'I am revered rather like an old building. Yet I still seem to be master of my fate. The boat may be only a canoe, but I'm paddling it.'

Three final opinions from other people: first, Humphrey Bogart: 'She talks at you as though you were a microphone … she lectured the hell out of me on temperance and the evils of drink. She doesn't give a damn how she looks. I don't think she tries to be a character. I think she is one.'

And James Agate: 'She has a cheekbone like a death's head attached to a manner as sinister and aggressive as crossbones.'

And our old friend anon: 'A cross between Donald Duck and a Stradivarius.'

Famous line (Stage Door) 'The calla lilies are in bloom again …'

Famous line (The Philadelphia Story) 'I'm going crazy. I'm standing here, on my own two hands, and going crazy.'

Famous line (The African Queen) 'Nature, Mr Allnut, is what we are put into this world to rise above.'

“ A careful and successful actor, Heston has been blessed with the kind of impressive face and physique that inevitably got him cast as a succession of epic heroes. This was a mixed blessing to his career. On the one hand, as he said: 'There's a special excitement in playing a man who made a hole in history large enough to be remembered centuries after he died.'

Commercially, furthermore: 'If you can't make a career out of two de Milles, you'll never do it.'

On the other hand: 'After spending all of last winter in armour it's a great relief to wear costume that bends.'

Heston has continued to explore, without having to resort to character parts. He knows however that: 'The minute you feel you have given a faultless performance is the time to get out.'

And: 'I have played three presidents, three saints and two geniuses. If that doesn't create an ego problem, nothing does.'

Having played Antony (and lost) he still feels: 'The great roles are always Shakespearean.', and has found: 'It's hard living up to Moses.'

He believes: 'It is essential that gun owners unite in an active, growing force capable of flexing great muscle as the next millennium commences.'

Hitchcock, Sir Alfred (1899–1980)

British director, in Hollywood more or less since 1940. His name, his profile, and his lugubrious voice are a trademark around the world for suspense thrillers with a touch of impudence, using techniques which are purely cinematic; though of course he frequently fell below his own high standards.

Biography: Of innumerable books written about him, the most detailed and typical is probably Le Cinéma Selon Hitchcock by François Truffaut (1966, translated into English). Others include Alfred Hitchcock: A Life in Darkness and Light by Patrick McGilligan; Hitch by John Russell Taylor (the 'official' biography); Alfred Hitchcock by George Perry; a Freudian analysis, The Secret Life of Alfred Hitchcock by Donald Spoto; Alfred Hitchcock – The Hollywood Years by Joel Finler; Hitchcock on Hitchcock, edited by Sidney Gottlieb; and 2001, Writing with Hitchcock: The Collaboration of Alfred Hitchcock and John Michael Hayes by Steven Derosa.

Other books: 1999, Hitchcock's Secret Notebooks by Dan Auiler; 1999, The Complete Hitchcock by Paul Condon and Jim Sangster; 1999, English Hitchcock by Charles Barr; 2000, The Hitchcock Murders by Peter Conrad.

In 1944 Hitch also directed two war documentaries for the Ministry of Information: Bon Voyage and Aventure Malagache.

TV series: Alfred Hitchcock Presents 55–61.

✪ For his understanding of the craft of the cinema; and for his virtuosity in expressing it. Foreign Correspondent.

❝ Hitch did not even have to build up his own legend: eager critics like Truffaut did it for him. The suspense master did, however, oblige the press with a variety of bon mots about himself and his work. Personally I like best his story of how he caused consternation in a crowded elevator by muttering very audibly to a friend: 'I didn't think the old man would bleed so much.'

His little epigrams include: 'Drama is life with the dull bits left out.', and: 'Always make the audience suffer as much as possible.', and: 'There is no terror in a bang, only in the anticipation of it.', and: 'Terror is a matter of surprise; suspense, of forewarning.', and 'I've become a body of films, not a man. I am all those films.', and: 'A good film is when the price of the admission, the dinner and the babysitter was well worth it.', and: 'The cinema is not a slice of life, it's a piece of cake.', and: 'Sometimes you find that a film is liked only for its content, without any regard to the style or the manner in which the story is told. But that, after all, is the art of the cinema.'

And his defence if the tricks don't work: 'All things considered, I think I'm doing well if I get the sixty per cent of my original conception on the screen.'

He despised long dialogue sequences: 'A film-maker isn't supposed to say things. He's supposed to show them.'

He despised actors too. One of his most widely publicized remarks was: 'Actors are cattle.'

His current star, Carole Lombard, promptly led a troop of oxen onto the shooting stage and herself headed for home. Hitch thought it discreet to tell the press: 'I didn't say actors are cattle. What I said was, actors should be treated like cattle.'

He clearly knew himself to be typecast as a mystery man: 'If I made Cinderella, the audience would be looking out for a body in the coach.'

Perhaps his most quoted admission is: 'That was the ending I wanted for Blackmail, but I had to change it for commercial reasons.'

Many tributes have been paid to him, but John Frankheimer's is all-embracing: 'Any American director who says he hasn't been influenced by him is out of his mind.'

Cary Grant was happy with Hitch: 'He couldn't have been a nicer fellow. I whistled coming to work on his films.'

Andrew Sarris saw Hitch's problem: 'His reputation has suffered from the fact that he has given audiences more pleasure than is permissible in serious cinema.'

Doggedly into his 70s he continued to invent mayhem: 'When people say I'm 70 I say that's a confounded lie. I'm twice 35, that's all. Twice 35.'

He had little reason for complaint: 'Even my failures make money and become classics a year after I make them.'

And he continued to be a realist: 'The length of the film should be directly related to the endurance of the human bladder.'

Hitler, Adolf (1889–1945) (Adolf Schickelgruber)

German fascist dictator, subject of many screen documentaries, notably Mein Kampf 63 and The Life of Adolf Hitler 65. Actors who have impersonated him include Chaplin in The Great Dictator 40; Luther Adler in The Magic Face 51 and The Desert Fox 52; Tom Dugan in To Be or Not To Be 42 and Star Spangled Rhythm 42; Ludwig Donath in The Strange Death of Adolf Hitler 43; Albin Skoda in The Last Act 55; Kenneth Griffith in The Two-Headed Spy 58; Richard Basehart in Hitler 61; Billy Frick in Is Paris Burning? 65; Sidney Miller in Which Way to the Front? 69; Alec Guinness in Hitler: The Last Ten Days 73; Leonid Mosgovoi in Moloch 99, about Hitler's relationship with Eva Braun. Most frequent Hitler-player, however, is Robert Watson, who in the 40s seemed to do little else; apart from an excellent serious portrayal in The Hitler Gang 44, he supplied Hitler walk-ons in The Devil with Hitler 42, That Nazty Nuisance 43, Hitler Dead or Alive 43, The Miracle of Morgan's Creek 44, The Story of Mankind 57, and many others.

In the 80s television began to show renewed interest in fanciful presentations of Hitler. Anthony Hopkins played him in The Bunker; Derek Jacobi in Inside the Third Reich; and Gunther Meisner in The Winds of War.

Hollywood Ten
The name given to ten Hollywood talents who were the first to be called to testify before the House Un-American Activities Committee (HUAC) hearings in Washington in 1947. They refused to co-operate when asked if they were communists, were branded as 'unfriendly witnesses' and sentenced to imprisonment. Following the hearings, executives from the major studios met together and fired the Ten, beginning the blacklisting that affected the lives and careers of more than three hundred other actors, writers and directors over the next decade or so. The Ten were: Alvah Bessie, Herbert Biberman, Lester Cole, Edward Dmytryk, Ring Lardner Jnr, John Howard Lawson, Albert Maltz, Samuel Ornitz, Adrian Scott and Dalton Trumbo. Dmytryk later testified to HUAC in 1951, naming twenty-six others as having belonged to left-wing groups.

Autobiography: 1965, Inquisition in Eden by Alvah Bessie. 1972, The Time of the Toad: A Study of Inquisition in America by Dalton Trumbo. 1978, It's a Hell of a Life by Edward Dmytryk. 1981, Hollywood Red by Lester Cole.

Hopkins, Sir Anthony(1937–)

Welsh leading actor, now in Hollywood. Born in Port Talbot, Swansea, he studied at RADA and was on stage from 1960. From 1967 to 1971, he was a member of Britain's National Theatre before going to the US to make films. A gifted mimic, he dubbed Olivier's voice for extra scenes added to the 1990 re-release of Spartacus. Also an accomplished pianist, he composed the score for his directorial debut, August. In 1998, he gave £1m to the National Trust towards the £3m cost of purchasing land surrounding Snowdon, Wales; shortly thereafter he announced his retirement from acting. 'Acting is bad for mental health. I can't take it any more,' he said. 'To hell with this stupid business, this ridiculous showbusiness.' He has since repeated his most famous screen role, as serial killer Hannibal Lecter. He was knighted in 1993.

“I was lousy in school. Real screwed-up. A moron. I was antisocial and didn't bother with the other kids. A really bad student. I didn't have any brains. I didn't know what I was doing there. That's why I became an actor. – A.H.

There were days I'd drink a bottle of tequila and I didn't care if I died. I was so wasted up, so empty and emotionally bankrupt. God, how I loved tequila - such wonderful stuff. Being an alcoholic was an amazing and powerful experience. I wouldn't have missed it for the world. But I'm sorry for the hurt I caused people. – A.H.

I am able to play monsters well. I understand monsters. I understand madmen. I can understand what makes people tick in these darker levels. – A.H.

I like to be centre-stage, taking the big parts. I'm not interested in being worthy. – A.H.

However gentle he is, you feel that there is a bomb waiting to explode, that if the moment came the screen would shatter in front of you. – Sir Richard Attenborough

He has all those stutters and scratches and coughs and mini-splutters; it's always the same and it's awful. He's a much better actor than that, but these days he always seems to be doing the same irritating, mannered thing. He's forever coughing and spitting and winking and blinking. – Robert Stephens

Hopkins, Robert (1886–1966)
American screenwriter, mainly for MGM, whose special talent it was to improve scripts by adding gags, and providing instant dialogue for actors during filming. Born in San Francisco, he worked in odd jobs and at a gambling casino before going to Hollywood. Anita Loos recalled that he was once asked to add some lines in a scene where circus aerialists crash from a high platform to their deaths: "'Something dramatic!" the director ordered. Scorning the suggestions, Hoppy offered the following: "I saw Mabel back in Tulsa." "That so? How does she like being married?" "Not too much. She's homesick." At which point the rigging broke and, as the two crashed to the ground, Hoppy's unrelated dialogue gave the tragedy an extra shock.'

Sidewalks of New York (dialogue) 31. Stepping Out (co-w) 31. The Chief (co-w) 33. San Francisco (story) 36. Saratoga (co-w) 37, etc.

❝ He roamed the lot with a cup of black coffee in hand. He stalked the producers, and spying one on the lot, Hoppy would block his path to propound his latest idea, using his free hand to punch his index finger into the man's chest, talking in clipped, rapid-fire fashion, accenting points that only he understood: 'All right, you're a lucky man … here it is, New Orleans! Gable, Shearer, Crawford and Garbo! Get it?' – Samuel Marx

During the early years of the Second World War, Hoppy walked up to Zanuck, stuck a finger into Zanuck's shoulder and said, 'Zanuck! Tyrone Power – A Yank in the RAF! Zanuck – I've made ya!' He walked away. Zanuck made it into one of his most successful pictures. – Joseph L. Mankiewicz

“ The precision of his manners went into his playwriting. He wrote out of a warm heart and with a cabinetmaker's attitude towards its contents. – Ben Hecht
It is to Howard's great credit that he seemed to appreciate what Hollywood, for all his desperate effort to beat its influence, had done to him. Asked if Hollywood had had any sinister effect upon him – I here quote the New York Times – he said that it had, that the lack of an audience and the low standard of taste had exerted an impact on his own playwriting integrity. 'It's the easy money, perhaps; I don't know,' he said. 'But it's true.' – George Jean Nathan

“I don't try to guess what a million people will like. It's hard enough to know what I like. – J.H.

I fail to see any continuity in my work from picture to picture. – J.H.

I completely storyboarded The Maltese Falcon because I didn't want to lose face with the crew: I wanted to give the impression that I knew what I was doing. – J.H.

Most of us go through life searching for the unobtainable and if we do get it, we find it's unacceptable. – J.H.

There is nothing more fascinating – and more fun – than making movies. Besides, I think I'm finally getting the hang of it. – J.H. (1984)

Ince, Thomas (1882–1924)
American director, a contemporary of D. W. Griffith and some say an equal innovator. On stage from the age of six, he began in films as an actor before becoming a director with Carl Laemmle's company. He systematized production methods, built his own studio and provided films of a high quality. Died suddenly at the end of a weekend aboard William Randolph Hearst's yacht, officially of a heart attack brought on by acute indigestion. There were rumours that he had been shot by Hearst, who suspected that Ince had seduced his mistress Marion Davies, that he died accidentally, hit by a shot intended for Charlie Chaplin, and that Louella Parsons owed her position as a columnist for Hearst's papers by not telling what had happened. He was played by Cary Elwes in Peter Bogdanovitch's feature The Cat's Meow, 01, based on a play by Steven Peros about the incident. He was the brother of John and Ralph Ince. Best remembered now for Custer's Last Fight 12. Civilization 15. Human Wreckage 23.

Isherwood, Christopher (1904–1986)
English novelist and screenwriter, mainly in Hollywood. Born in Cheshire and briefly educated at Cambridge University, he was a member of the group of 30s left-wing writers clustered around poet W. H. Auden. An inveterate cinema-goer, he attempted to find work in British studios and first worked with visiting Hollywood director Berthold Viertel, a friendship he resumed after he and Auden moved to America in 1939. He lived in California, where he worked intermittently for Hollywood studios. Goodbye to Berlin, his book of stories, was dramatized by John Van Druten as I Am a Camera, which was subsequently filmed and later became the stage and screen musical Cabaret.

❝Screenwriting, to me, is the most absorbing of all games. – C.I.

I don't think that I bring very much to films. I think that films bring a great deal to me. By working in this medium, which is a medium of visualization primarily, I learned a great, great deal, which I could use in my books. I never really saw things before. – C.I.

I seem to have put my bad luck into film-writing and all my good luck into the rest of my life! It would be a bore to complain; but, really, the films I wrote have nearly all ended in disaster, mitigated or unmitigated. – C.I.

A good – because psychologically true – Hollywood story. A maid boasts to her friend – also a maid – about the house she works at: wonderful people – they entertain every night – and always big celebrities, top stars. The friend is thrilled: 'And what do they talk about?' The maid: 'Us.' – C.I.

Julius Caesar (102–44 BC)
The Roman emperor has been memorably portrayed by Claude Rains in Caesar and Cleopatra, Warren William in the 1934 Cleopatra, and Rex Harrison in the 1962 remake. Shakespeare's play was filmed many times in silent days, but the only notable sound versions in English have been Joseph L. Mankiewicz's 1953 production with Louis Calhern as Caesar, James Mason as Brutus, John Gielgud as Cassius, and Marlon Brando as Mark Antony, and the 1970 version with Gielgud as Caesar, Richard Johnson as Cassius, and Charlton Heston as Mark Antony. A British second feature of 1959, An Honourable Murder, brought the story up to date as a melodrama of boardroom intrigue. In Carry On Cleo Kenneth Williams played Caesar, and may have started the decline and fall of the Roman empire.

“Movies are so rarely great that if we cannot appreciate great trash we have very little reason to be interested in them – P.K.

I think my influence was largely in style, not substance. Other critics sound like me because my writing has influenced them. They've rarely agreed with me about movies – P.K.

I've been told I have influenced some people to become directors. Unfortunately, most of them are lousy. – P.K.

✪ For his sinister Englishness, his sepulchral tones and his unfailing eagerness to please. Bride of Frankenstein.
❝ When I was nine I played the demon king in Cinderella and it launched me on a long and happy life of being a monster. –
Though Karloff fought against being typecast, he later admitted: 'The monster was the best friend I ever had.'
How did he get the part? Said producer Carl Laemmle Junr: 'His eyes mirrored the suffering we needed.'
Director James Whale amplified this: 'His face fascinated me. I made drawings of his head, adding sharp bony ridges where I imagined the skull might have joined.'
Karloff however insisted: 'You could heave a brick out of the window and hit ten actors who could play my parts. I just happened to be on the right corner at the right time.'
His daughter Sara revealed that he was far from a monster in real life: 'He was very British. He was soft-spoken, articulate, kind and well educated. He loved playing cricket and gardening and had a pet pig named Violet.'

Karno, Fred (1866–1941) (Frederick John Westcott)
English impresario who originated or refined many influential slapstick routines (including the custard pie in the face) with his teams of comedians, who included over the years Betty Balfour, Billy Bennett, Charlie Chaplin, Stan Laurel, Naughton and Gold, Will Hay, Syd Walker and Robb Wilton. Born in Exeter, he was a factory worker at the age of 14, a plumber and a circus acrobat. In the mid-1890s he performed a silent act in music halls, turning in the early 1900s to producing shows and plays from his South London 'Fun Factory'. In the late 20s, bankrupted by his Karsino, a lavish showplace on a Thames island, he went to Hollywood and briefly worked for Hal Roach. Back in London, he wrote the story for an unsuccessful film, Bad Companions, before overseeing comedies based on his music-hall sketches. He set up his own production company, which failed after its first film, Don't Rush Me, and ended up running a wine and beer shop in Lilliput, a Dorset village. In the 1992 biopic Chaplin, he was played by John Thaw. Chaplin's early short A Night at the Show 15, and his own Oh, What a Duchess!, are based on his long-running music-hall act 'The Mumming Birds', in which a drunk (played by Chaplin on-stage) and a boy become entangled in a succession of second-rate acts.

Biography: 1939, Remember Fred Karno by Edwin Adeler and Con West. 1971, Fred Karno, Master of Mirth and Tears by J. P. Gallagher.

❝ Keep it wistful, gentlemen, keep it wistful as well. That's hard to do, but we want sympathy with the laughter. Wistful! – F.K. to his comics

When in doubt, fall on your arse. – F.K.

During a performance of one of his comedies if he did not like a comedian he would stand in the wings and hold his nose and give an audible raspberry. – Charlie Chaplin

Fred Karno is not only a genius, he is the man who originated slapstick comedy. – Hal Roach

He had no equal. His name was box-office. – Stan Laurel

Famous catchphrase (from his sketch 'The Bailiffs'): 'Meredith, we're in!'

Famous saying: 'Leave 'em wanting.'

Kaufman, George S. (1889–1961)
American comedy playwright, theatre director, critic, screenwriter and wit, many of whose works were filmed. Born in Pittsburgh, he was a New York journalist before turning to the theatre, first collaborating with Marc Connelly and later with Edna Ferber, Morrie Ryskind (on the Marx Brothers' Broadway hits Cocoanuts and Animal Crackers), and, most frequently, Moss Hart. A regular at the Algonquin Round Table, he avoided Hollywood as much as possible: his contract with Samuel Goldwyn to write Eddie Cantor's Roman Scandals had as conditions that he worked from New York and didn't have to listen to Cantor; when Cantor came to New York to make suggestions, he quit. Once, when studio head Adolph Zukor offered him $30,000 for the movie rights to one of his plays, he replied by offering Zukor $40,000 for Paramount Pictures. He worked briefly in Hollywood in the mid-30s when, at Groucho Marx's suggestion, Irving Thalberg offered him $100,000 to write A Night at the Opera. Observing Louis B. Mayer at work led him to write a song entitled 'I'd Rather Have TB than LB'. He returned only once, in 1947, to direct The Senator Was Indiscreet; when that film was denounced as 'unAmerican' by Senator Joseph McCarthy, he vowed never to return. He was involved in a minor scandal in the mid-30s, when actress Mary Astor's diary, describing him as a great lover, was read out in court. His second wife was actress Leueen MacGrath.

Kaye, Danny (1913–1987) (David Daniel Kaminsky)
Ebullient, lanky, red-haired American star entertainer of stage, screen and television. Born in New York, of Ukrainian immigrant parents, he began entertaining at summer camps and made several unpromising two-reelers in the 30s (later compiled as The Danny Kaye Story). After he scored a success in Broadway musicals, Samuel Goldwyn signed him to a five-year contract, turned him into a blond, and gave him the big build-up. His first films reworked gibberish songs and tongue-twisting numbers from his cabaret and musical performances, and he gained enormous popularity. He was at his best in live performance, though, and scored an immense success with a season at the London Palladium in 1948. He moved to Warners and, later Paramount, where he started his own production company with Norman Panama and Melvin Frank. But their first film together, Court Jester, cost $4m and grossed $2.2m, and his later movies were disappointing. Thereafter, he concentrated on television, conducting symphony orchestras for charity, working as 'Ambassador at large' for UNICEF, and cooking at his home, where he created a restaurant-grade Chinese kitchen, preparing meals for small groups of friends, though conversation was discouraged. He was given a Special Academy Award in 1954 'for his unique talents, his service to the industry and the American people'. Married Sylvia Fine, who wrote most of his material and songs, and managed his career. His lovers included actress Eve Arden

✪ For terpsichorean delights performed with cheerful proletarian grace. Singin' in the Rain.

“ The days at MGM were marvellous. Everyone was pitching in. We had real collaboration. It was fun. We didn't think it was work. – G.K.

Fred Astaire represents the aristocracy when he dances. I represent the proletariat. – G.K.

His grin could melt stone. – New Yorker, 1978

Famous line (to Nina Foch in An American in Paris) 'That's quite a dress you almost have on.'

Kelly, George (1890–1974)
American playwright, a former actor, whose Broadway successes of the 20s were filmed several times. He was the brother of actor Walter C. Kelly, and uncle of actress Grace Kelly. The third, 1950, version of his Pulitzer Prize-winning play Craig's Wife gave Joan Crawford one of her most typical roles as a possessive and domineering woman.
